Overview:
The Cornell International Affairs Review is a student-run publication at Cornell University dedicated to publishing papers that contribute to our collective understanding of contemporary international affairs.

Our editors seek to curate papers that present original research and demonstrate novel arguments or interpretative approaches. Papers should preferably address events and trends that are not well-established in current scholarship, yet have immediate global relevance and engage a broader and more diverse audience beyond the traditional academic sphere.

As such, we welcome submissions from any relevant field of study, and particularly encourage papers that seek to address lesser-studied regions and historically underrepresented demographics. We also heavily encourage the submission of papers that utilize non-English language secondary scholarship or primary research.

Submission Requirements:
Submissions must be original academic papers between 3,000 - 15,000 words in length. The word count includes footnotes, citations, appendices, and the abstract (if applicable). Manuscripts must contain properly formatted citations and footnotes based on the Chicago reference system.

Submissions must be written in English. However, in the interest of promoting diversity of authorship, papers will not be penalized on the basis of English proficiency alone—provided that the content therein is both coherent and intelligible.

Submissions must pertain to an aspect of contemporary international affairs (defined as occurring within 20 years of the current year).

Submissions must be written by either professors, postgraduate students, or undergraduate students currently affiliated with accredited academic institutions.

Manuscripts should be submitted as Microsoft Word documents or .pdf documents to editor.ciar@gmail.com before the final deadline. Manuscripts submitted before the early submission deadline will receive priority consideration.

The subject line of the email should be formatted as such: [S19]: Title of Submission.

Deadlines:
Early Submission Deadline: January 27th, 2019
Final Deadline: February 10th, 2019
